

School Accommodations to Assist Anxious Children

Classroom environment

Anxious children perform best in a calm, supportive, but organized classroom. Because change and uncertainty can be unsettling, a structured classroom, calmly disciplined, will let children feel safe and know what to expect. An ideal situation is a teacher who maintains authority positively, using reason and respect rather than fear of punishment.

- Seating within classroom

Anxious children often struggle with the unlikely fear that they will get in trouble. Seating away from more rambunctious classmates will be less distracting, and may help them focus on their work rather than feeling responsible for the class.

- Following directions

Concerns about getting the directions wrong either because of distraction or misunderstanding are common. Signaling the class first when giving directions (flashing lights, clapping hands) and when possible having directions written on the board or elsewhere may assure anxious children that they have understood the directions.

- Class participation

Fears of getting the answer wrong, saying something embarrassing, or simply having other kids look at them may be concerns for an anxious child. Determine the child's comfort with either closed-ended questions (requiring a yes or no) or with opinion questions; start with whichever is easiest. Use a signal to let the child know that his/her turn is coming. Provide opportunities for the child to share knowledge on topics in which he/she is most confident.

- Class presentations

Children with extreme social anxiety may have difficulty with oral reports. Consider having the child present to the teacher alone, or have the child audiotape or videotape the presentation at home.

- Answering questions at the board

For children with social anxiety, the combination of getting the answer wrong, and being visible to the whole class may be so overwhelming that they may opt to avoid school altogether. Consider having the child exempt from going up to the board until they are ready to handle that challenge, or begin to approach that situation by eliminating the risk of being wrong by simply asking the child to write the date on the board.

- Testing conditions

Extended time on tests will ease the pressure on anxious children, and just knowing that the time is available may obviate the need to use it. Sometimes anxious children become distracted when they see other children working on their tests or turning them in; they may inaccurately assume that they don't know the material as well. Testing in an alternate, quiet location may be preferable for some children. Consider the use of word banks, equation sheets, to cue children whose anxiety may make them "blank out" on rote material.
- Lunchroom/recess/unstructured activities

Free-choice times can be a welcome and necessary break from the pressures of school, but fears of rejection in the cafeteria or on the playground can take the fun out of free time. Bridge the gap socially by creating ties between small groups of children. A lunch bunch with two or three children can create a shared experience which kids can then draw on later. When working in pairs or small groups, don't always have children choose the groupings themselves - alternate this with a "counting off" technique or drawing straws to allow variability in the groupings.
- Safe person

Having one person at school who understands the child's worries and anxieties can make the difference between a child attending school and staying home. A guidance counsellor, principal, nurse, or teacher can be identified as a point person for the child to check in with briefly (5-10 minutes) to help dispel worry thoughts, take deep breaths and return to class.
- Cooldown pass

Pressures build for anxious children. Being able to leave the situation briefly to get a drink of water or wash their face can allow them to clear their heads and return to class on a less anxious track. Since anxious children may be hesitant to ask for this and risk being the centre of attention, use an orange card which the child simply places on his desk, or the teacher's desk, which signals they are out on break. In general, anxious children are exceedingly honest and responsible and will not misuse this privilege.
- Assemblies/large group activities

Some children become anxious in crowds. Until a child has mastered the auditorium, allow them to sit where they feel most comfortable (e.g., at the end of the row in the back of the auditorium). See if they can gradually rejoin their class.
- Return after illness

Ever responsible, anxious kids may be very distressed about work they have missed while they were away. Assign a responsible buddy to copy notes and share handouts. If tests are given the day of the child's return, give them the option to take the test at another time and use the test time to make up any other missing work.

- Field trips
Compounding the daily stress of the anxious child, field trips include the factors of being away from home and parents, and a change in routine. Accommodate the child's level of readiness so that he/she can participate as fully as possible. Consider having the child in the "teacher's group" or having parents accompany the group until the child is ready to handle an excursion without these supports in place.
- Change in routine/substitute teachers
Because anxious children try very hard to please and predict what is required in a situation, changes of any sort may be experienced as very stressful. When possible, send a note home the day before to alert the child/family to a change in routine. This will allow the child to process the change in his or her comfort zone and will make the transitions go more smoothly the next day.
- Fire/safety drills
While these drills are for a child's safety, anxious children may be very distressed by imagining that these events were actually happening. If there is an opportunity to signal the child in person just before the alarm sounds, this may buffer the surprise of the drill and allow children to mobilize with less distress.
- Homework expectations
If children are spending inordinate amounts of time on homework because of OCD redoing, rechecking, rereading, or simply worrying that the assignment wasn't done thoroughly enough, the teacher can set a reasonable amount of time for homework and then reduce the homework load to fit into that time frame. Teachers can also provide time estimates for each assignment (this could be helpful to the entire class), so that the anxious child can attempt to stay within 10% of the estimated time. Eliminate repetition by having the child do every other math question, reduce reading and writing assignments, consider books on tape if a child is unable to read without repetition. For a child with writing difficulties, consider having a parent, teacher, or another student "scribe" for the child while he or she dictates the answers.

This information was taken from The Children's Center for OCD & Anxiety website: www.worrywisekids.org. The website has information about types of anxiety, treatment and resources for parents and children.